

In this guide, you'll discover how to fully utilize the wealth-generating gifts you've been given to reach your full potential in wealth attraction and abundance in your life.

Once you awaken the DNA within you... you'll find that the world is truly your oyster.

This will show you how to receive all the opportunities that will be gifted to you by the universe.

This report, will show you exactly what your Prosperity DNA type was destined for— you'll be able to clearly see, what you were meant to do – what naturally 'clicks' for you – and the jobs, and lines of work that will be second nature to you.

The goal of this guide is to help you discover and explore your unique talents, so that work, never feels like work – but instead a joy that brings you happiness every single day.

Your Prosperity DNA, has specific preferences... and if you try employing your non-dominant preferences, it will feel unnatural to you.

When you pick a career, that's right for you– everything will simply fall into place.

We tend to feel awake and alive when we are involved in an activity that completely utilizes our Prosperity DNA.

Your Prosperity DNA type is Courageous.

What this means that you'll suit jobs that are similar to these roles.

Your IDEAL Careers:

Firefighter, performer, business owner, professional athlete, government official, political figure, professional gamer

How to Make Your Prosperity DNA work For You

As someone with the Courageous DNA type... you're likely to be someone who thinks a lot.

You have a dynamic attitude, and you have an innate desire for adventure.

This means that you get bored easily, but having said that – you have the flexibility and dynamism to solve problems fast.

This is why you suit industries and lines of work that don't have a sense of routine, and require your creative dynamic spirit, allowing you to learn new things through hands-on experience.

Becoming the best at what you do – and feeling that you deserve wealth and a change in your life so good that they can't ignore you.

Irrespective of the career you choose to follow or the work you choose to do, becoming the best in whatever you do is the key to unlocking wealth and tremendous positive changes in your life.

This mindset of being the best at what you do helps you focus on what you can offer the world and not what the world can offer you. Regardless of how you feel about your career right now, adopting this mindset will provide the groundwork for a rewarding career.

Because the principle is really simple, if you want to earn big and become wealthy, you need to do tasks that pay you really well. If you want a job that pays you really well, you need to have rare and valuable skills that will bring in money.

If you want a rare and valuable skill, you need to be the best with that skill. When you offer the world your fine-tuned skills that you do best, the world, in return, offers you riches and wealth in return for what you do best.

Take, for example. Apple gadgets are one of the most expensive brands among gadget brands.

They always try to be diversified and upgrade their products periodically. Apple knows what they do best, so they offer what they do best to the world.

In return, we chase after the latest iPhone with our hard-earned money.

The work you're doing right now might not be what you love and have passion for, and that's fine. Because your work should come in first before your passion.

The best work that would bring in the wealth you want won't be easy or something you love doing.

You have to pass through the difficult phase of doing what you should do regardless of how hard it is. Then you fall in love with it in the long run.

Ira Glass, for example, is pushing the frontiers of radio while collecting a flood of prizes.

Glass began as an intern before becoming a tape cutter for All Things Considered. Many young people follow Glass's example, starting with an internship at a local NPR station and working their way up to a low-level production position. But Glass began to separate himself from the crowd when he focused on making his abilities more unique and valued. His snappy segment editing earned him the opportunity to present a handful of his own pieces live.

The more you learn about Glass, the more you realize he was a young guy determined to perfect his abilities until they were too important to ignore.

His career now is filled with creativity, influence, and power, yet when you read his biography, you can't help but notice the economic connotations. Glass gave up a set of hard-won, unusual, and valued skills in return for his excellent job, and wealth flowed in.

According to supply and demand, if you desire certain properties, you must have unusual and valuable skills to provide in exchange. Consider these unique and important abilities as your professional capital.

The attitude, with its unwavering emphasis on becoming "so good they can't ignore you," is an excellent method for accumulating professional capital. This is why, if your purpose is to create something you enjoy, it takes precedence over the passion attitude.

==END==